It's the last day for Blue Jean's (Wren Walker) stripclub somewhere in the middle of nowhere, as she's been bought out by a ruthless businessman (Al Dales) - but that doesn't mean she doesn't want to give her customers the greatest show ever, and all her girls are up for the task, so it should be a great send-off for her... until Pablo (Rafael Mateo) and his miner friends arrive at the joint - oh don't get me wrong, they are all perfect gentlemen towards her and the girls, they just have one tiny problem: They've found what smells like oil in their mine which ultimately turns them into violent zombies - but zombies of the thinking kind - who start to attack the staff and customers alike. And before all customers notice the zombie attack even, it has turned into a fight for survival, and what makes things worse, these zombies need more than a bullet to the head to die - but how much more is at anybody's guess. So eventually, most of those involved die, and Blue Jean only just manages to find refuge in one of the club's backrooms with the bouncer (Chaz Odin Darko) who's secretly in love with her, her foster son (Madison J. Loos) who's nothing but trouble despite having a heart of gold, and Carla (Kirsty Peters), a highly pregnant stripper who I'm sure has been told by her doctor to stay clear of any potential zombie outbreak. Still, this is only a very small and not very potent group, so their outlook looks grim ...

Strippers versus zombies isn't a new concept anymore in 2016 - but this little film does get it right, finding the right balance between the humour the premise demands and seriousness to make this work as a horror movie - in other words, the film never takes itself too seriously (and it actually does milk its strip club settings for quite some jokes), but never drifts off into just being moronic. And a solid ensemble cast really up to their task, a directorial effort that does understand how to create tension and suspense, but also some quite visceral effects work make this one a really enjoyable genre flick. Worth a look at least!

Tales to Chill
Your Bones to

by Michael Haberfelner

Robots and rats, demons and pithole cuddly toys and shopping mall Santa love and death and everything in between Tales to Chill Your Bones to is all of that.

Tales to Chill Your Bones to - a collection of short stories and mini-pisodes ranging from the horrific to the darkly humourous from the post-apocalypse to the weirdly romantic tales that will give you chills and maybe a chuckle though up with the twisted mind of screenwriter and film reviewer Michael Haberfelner
